INTRODUCTION.

These Tables, prepared in the same form as those of a similar publication at Calcutta, apply to a more extended period, and are complete as regards the several Eras from the Christian year A. D. 1752 to 1852.

In elucidation of them, it may be observed, that the Christian Era commences from the date of the birth of Christ, which occurred, according to British Chronologers, 4004 years after the Creation of the world. The Civil year is divided into twelve months, and into 365 days, an additional day being added every fourth (leap) year.

If a fourth year fall at the close of a Century, the additional day is not added, unless the number of years is divisible by 4. Thus, the year 1800, occurring in these Tables, consists of 365 days only, although the fourth year from that on which the last intercalation took place. The year 1752, with which the Tables commence, is that of the abandonment of the Julian Calendar, or old style, and the adoption of the Gregorian Calendar, or new style, by the British nation. The difference in these two styles, which amounted to 11 days, was ordered to be omitted in the month of September 1752, by Act of Parliament.

Of the Hindoo Eras, the first derives its name (Vikrumujit) from a sovereign of Malwa, and is reckoned from the year 56 before Christ. The second is reckoned from A. D. 78, the name (Shalivahun) being derived from a Prince supposed to have reigned at that period in the kingdom of Narsinga.

In the first of these Eras, the year commences on the first of the Hindoo month Karteek Shoodh, and in the latter on the 1st Chuetr Shoodh. The months are lunar, and one (Udheek Mas) is intercalated every third year. Each consists of 30 equal parts, or Tithi, subdivided into 15 Tithi, the first half (Shoodh) commencing with the new moon, the last (Vudy), with the full moon. Those lunar days on which the sun does not rise, are struck out, and those on which he rises twice are doubled, so that two Hindoo dates occasionally correspond with one English one, and vice versâ. These are all indicated in the following Tables.

Besides the Udheek months above alluded to, intercalated by the Hindoos for the regulation of their religious festivals, there occurs in the Century comprised in the following Tables a Kshuy Mas, or cancelled month. To supply the deficiency of this in the year A. D. 1822, wherein the Hindoo month Marghsheersh is omitted, an additional intercalary month (Chuetr) occurs early in the year A. D. 1823.

At a later period, A. D. 1842, a dispute arose regarding the calculation of a Kshuy month, which was adopted in the Deccan and Guzerat; the Bombay Chronologers refusing to recognize it. Thus, for three months a difference is apparent in the Hindoo Calendar; at the end of that period the intercalation of a month in the Provinces assimilated the reckoning.

The Arabian Era, Soorsun, commences thirteen years after the Epoch of the Hijree. It and the Fuslecsun are generally quoted by the Hindoos in dating documents. The latter is four years behind the Era of the Hijree, and is supposed to have been imposed on the inhabitants of India by their Mahomedan conquerors. It is the year of Harvest, or the Revenue year, and, with the Soorsun (both solar sidereal years), commences early in the month of June in the English Calendar.

The Mahomedan Era of the Hijree commenced on Friday the 15th July A. D. 622, according to the Hilalee or practical calculation, which is that followed in these Tables. By the Hisabee, or astronomical computation, the Era commenced one day earlier. The years of this Era are lunar, and each commences on the 1st of the month Mohurrum.

Some difference is observable in the calculation of the dates in the Era of the Hijree between the following Tables and those published in Calcutta in 1835, for the period antecedent to the year A. D. 1803. Subsequent to that date, the Calcutta Tables agree with the "Indian Calendar," the publication of which commenced in Bombay in that year. The calculations in this volume are made on the same principles as those of the lastnamed publication, for the whole century to which they apply.

The Epoch of the Parsee Era of Yuzdijurd is the commencement of the reign of Yuzdijurd III., corresponding with the 6th June A. D. 632. Since the reformation of the Persian Calendar, which took place in A. D. 1075, the year consists of 12 months of 30 days each, five additional days (Guthan, Khumsah, Mooshturikuh) being added at the close of the twelfth month, to complete the reckoning.

The following Tables shew the two different modes of reckoning among the Parsees. According to the Kudcemee or Duryaee Nowroz, or Sea-reckoning, the year commences one month earlier than by the Shutimshahee calculation. In other respects they agree.
